Between regions, countries, communities, households

CSO Concerns

- there is nothing 'sustainable' about current economic and social systems that continue to operate within the framework of "business as usual".
- changes in production and consumption-system changes

- The development agenda need to be framed within the framework of human rights-equity and justice and larger goal of national development, poverty eradication, participation by citizens, and transparency and accountability.

- Reclaim and reaffirm the commitment to the principles of sustainable development: 'common but differentiated responsibility', 'precautionary principle', the principle of 'historical responsibility' (historical debt) and more recently the principle of 'free prior and informed consent'.

- Re-establish state responsibility as an indispensable actor in the process of delivering basic services to people beginning with setting legal and enforceable frameworks and standards of gender equality and social, economic and ecological justice in order to maintain and create sustainable and holistic communities;

- Safeguarding people and natural resources from corporatized growth-based frames and initiatives that serve to perpetuate failures

- Encourage and nurture the development of local economic and social models of development that increase the resilience of communities to face the adverse impacts of the ongoing regional and global interlinked crises- climate, financial, food, failure of market etc
