FAO/UNEP Project FP/1302-75-02

1. The present document has been prepared by the Legal Office of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO), as part of a joint project (No. 1302-75-02) with the United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP) within the framework of the UNEP International Referral System for Sources of Environmental Information (IRS).

Objectives

2. The immediate objective of the FAO/UNEP joint project is to provide a computerized index of the existing FAO data collection of current national legislation as it relates to environment and natural resources. The long-range objective of the project - which will depend on appropriate follow-up arrangements - is to make these data accessible to IRS users, with special emphasis on the needs of users from developing countries seeking up-to-date information on foreign legislation dealing with specific environmental problems.

3. This document is a summary report, submitted in advance of the scheduled date of project completion, with a view to providing interim information to participants in the Fifth Session of the UNEP Governing Council (Nairobi, 9-25 May 1977). The sample of legislative data reproduced in Annex III (approximately 600 items) only represents a 4% fraction of the total data indexed under the project, which is estimated at 15,000 items. This sample, chosen at random from the category of general environmental laws and regulations, does not therefore give the full range of either subjects or countries covered by the project. The scope of geographical/linguistic and subject coverage is indicated more accurately by the Index of Official Sources (Annex I) and the Subject Index (Annex II).

4. It should further be recalled that the data base from where this current information was drawn is a working collection which has been in existence and practical operation for more than 25 years: viz., the general FAO collection of food and agricultural legislation, which now holds approximately 130,000 texts (with an estimated annual increment of 5,000). While this data base, its processing and classification methods were developed in response to user needs that may differ from those of the IRS, it also offers a basic advantage: the fact that it has been tested and improved over the years, as a tool for the legislative reference service and legislative drafting assistance provided to a large number of developing countries by the FAO Legal Office, through its Legislation Branch.

5. The present FAO/UNEP project does not purport, at this stage, to provide operational services similar to those of FAO to IRS users. It should be viewed as a preliminary step for the identification of relevant comparative source material for national legislation on environment and natural resources. Further arrangements will be needed to organize the supplying of texts to IRS users, and the providing of specialized translation and expert advisory services as required. By illustrating the type of legislative information which is currently available on a world-wide basis, and which should be rendered accessible to developing countries in particular, the present document is intended to facilitate the planning of organizational arrangements for this purpose.

Background

6. The "information explosion" which occurred in the field of environmental law during the past decade has long been recognized as a problem for international action. Following an initial pilot project for the compilation of data on environmental legislation, undertaken in 1971 at the initiative of Mr. Maurice Strong in the course of preparations for the Stockholm Conference (Third Session of the Preparatory Committee, A/CONF. 48/PC. III/CRP.13), UNEP, through its International Referral System, has provided support to automated data storage and retrieval experiments in this field, such as the "Environmental Law Information System" of the International Union for Conservation of Nature and Natural Resources (IUCN). While there is at present no international data base ensuring reliable world-wide coverage of environmental law in general, important and environmentally relevant collections of sectoral legislation exist in several Specialized Agencies. Among these, the International Labour Organization (ILO) and more recently the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA) have developed computerized systems for legal data processing.

7. FAO, in continuation of the work started in 1905 by its predecessor, the International Institute of Agriculture, has since 1952 built up a collection of 130,000 national legislative texts within the various fields of the Organization's activities, which include the management and conservation of renewable natural resources in particular. The original texts are supplied on a continuous basis by Member Governments as part of their obligations under Article XI of the FAO Constitution, and are then processed, analyzed and translated as required for eventual reproduction or abstraction (in English, French and Spanish) in the semi-annual "Food and Agricultural Legislation" series. In addition, the FAO Legal Office provides comparative information and drafting assistance to Governments for new legislation (including general environmental laws, such as the 1974 Colombian Code of Renewable Natural Resources and Environment Protection, as well as laws dealing with particular sectors of natural resources management), and back-stopping for technical experts in the field. The legislative subject/country catalogue constituted from this material in the Legislation Branch of the Legal Office may be considered as one of the most comprehensive specialized data systems of its kind, particularly in view of its coverage of current legislative data concerning developing countries. One major advantage of this collection is that it is kept up to date on the basis of the approximately 100 national legislative gazettes continuously received and processed by the FAO Secretariat. In the legal field - where outdated information may not just be incomplete but misleading - this constant updating has proved to be a crucial factor for the reliability of the system as a whole.

8. The present joint project, initiated by FAO and UNEP in April 1976 for a duration of 14 months, aims at adapting the existing FAO catalogue to computerized data retrieval techniques as regards all environmentally relevant laws included in the catalogue. For this purpose, the index cards identifying and classifying environment-related texts are transcribed on special machine-readable forms, which by way of "Optical Character Recognition" (OCR) are then processed into magnetic tapes for computer use. Automatic retrieval of the data so stored now becomes possible, either by country or by subject classification or by date, or by any combination of these. Since the project draws on the data base of the existing FAO collection, it had to make eclectic use of the existing classification categories of that collection (see Annex II). While these subject categories - developed for use in the general context of food and agricultural legislation - are by no means ideal from the somewhat different viewpoint of environmental legislation, they provide a sufficiently detailed spectrum of subjects related to environment protection to allow quick identification of the most relevant laws. In particular, 25 years of FAO experience in providing technical assistance for legislation have shown that most users require reference information or drafting advice on one or more broad subject categories of law rather than on single articles or paragraphs dealing with a specific legal problem. It is on the basis of the data compiled under these broad headings (e.g. pesticides manufacture and use ; agricultural chemicals trade) that further legislative research can then be carried out for more narrowly defined objectives, such as those of the WHO/UNEP International Register of Potentially Toxic Chemicals (IRPTC). Once the subject category has thus been retrieved, a computer print-out of the relevant source references (sub-divided by country and date of enactment, as illustrated in Annex III) may be supplied to the user from which he could identify those laws which, in view of their index description, are of direct interest to him.

Comparative use of legislative data

9. The usefulness of international exchange of legislative information needs no further demonstration, "comparative law" and "comparative legislation" having become well-established fields of specialized legal education and research in most contemporary States. From a national point of view, foreign legislative experience can offer valuable background information for domestic law reform ; UNEP has repeatedly confirmed its intention to promote technical assistance for this purpose, which in turn requires a reliable source for the transfer of such information. From a global point of view, there is a recognized need to verify the legislative implementation of international agreements, and to promote the harmonization of national legislation in certain areas where internationally binding instruments may not be practicable. In either case, accurate and up-to-date comparative information is a prerequisite ; for this reason, the UNEP Secretariat has begun to build up "country files" on the national environmental legislation of UN Member States, which will need to be maintained and updated on the basis of current data inflow as outlined by the present project.

10. Two cautionary remarks are in order here : first, unlike most scientific information (which is usually transferable without difficulty for use outside its country of origin), legal information from any country typically requires expert interpretation. This characteristic dependence on expertise is most acute in the case of foreign legal sources, which, even after linguistic translation, tend to be of limited value - or downright misleading - unless they can be related to a different social context through comparative analysis and adaptation. In addition to providing reference and advisory services for national legislation, the FAO Legal Office therefore undertakes and publishes a series of studies in which the "raw" legislative data from different countries are analyzed and presented in comparative synthesis. Secondly, there is a tendency among legislators to emulate the most "modern" and most sophisticated foreign models, which in the case of environmental law are almost invariably borrowed from highly-developed industrial countries. This tendency is at least partly due to a lack of information on the legislation of other countries, especially developing countries. In order to provide a more balanced selection, and to promote wider dissemination of valuable alternative methods of legislation more adapted to the environmental conditions and needs of developing countries, special efforts must be made to ensure adequate coverage of relevant laws enacted in these countries, which for a number of technical reasons are neglected in most existing data collections. In this context, the International Association of Legal Science (IALS) is currently preparing in cooperation with UNEP and FAO a set of "Guidelines for Environmental Legislation in Developing Countries", which will include an assessment of recent innovative legislation from selected countries of the African, Asian and Latin American region.

Follow-up

11. As stated before, the present project is a preliminary step towards making one of the existing international collections of legislative data accessible to users seeking information on current environment-related law. In order to optimize its operational use to UNEP, the catalogue compiled by this project would have to be (a) kept up to date, on the basis of the continuing information inflow received and processed by the FAO Legal Office; (b) coordinated with other existing data collections which can be rendered accessible to IRS users; and (c) supplemented by arrangements for the actual supply of legislative texts to IRS users upon request, possibly together with translation and expert advisory services as required.

12. Up-dating of the catalogue could be carried out at comparatively minor financial and administrative expense, the total annual data increment of the FAO collection being approximately 5,000 items, out of which no more than 1,000 are likely to fall into the environmentally relevant categories listed in Annex II. The follow-up work to be arranged by agreement between UNEP and FAO would consist of ensuring the continued transcription of these relevant data from the FAO index cards to machine-readable format for OCR processing.

13. Coordination with other legislative data collections within the IRS would require a certain amount of preparatory consultations with potential cooperating agencies inside and outside the UN system. While each of these agencies will of course continue to be guided by its own priorities, a certain degree of standardisation in data processing and a rational division of work regarding data coverage (by subjects and countries) would seem feasible. Beyond the data base itself, a related task for inter-organizational coordination is the provision of technical expert assistance for the drafting of environmental legislation and for its administrative implementation. Several UN bodies and specialized agencies (including FAO, WHO, IMCO and UNIDO), as well as other international and national centres, have been active in this area. Since comparative legislative information is equally important for this field work, UNEP may wish to seek the advice of those concerned.

14. The most important and urgent follow-up action concerns the supply of full-text legislative data to IRS users, once the needed texts have been identified through the catalogue established under the present project and/or any follow-up projects. At present, no facilities exist either within the FAO Legal Office or within the UN Library in Geneva to carry out an "IRS user service" whereby copies of the legislative texts stored in Rome and Geneva can readily be made available upon request to outside users. The possibility of arrangements to this effect would have to be investigated by UNEP, in order to find mutually acceptable administrative and financial solutions. A further possibility worthy of consideration would be cooperative arrangements with other legal data centers, especially national law libraries holding suitable collections of legislative texts. For this purpose, UNEP might initiate contacts with the competent authorities and professional bodies (such as the International Association of Law Libraries), with a view to ascertaining the potential accessibility of existing legislative collections outside Geneva or Rome for IRS use. The long-term objective would be a world-wide network of legal data centers willing to provide IRS users with full-text copies of national environmental legislation in accordance with agreed standards of data classification and documentation supply.

INDEX OF OFFICIAL SOURCES

Titles and abbreviations of official gazettes, series or separate government publications (sep. pub./pub.sep) containing the texts of legislative enactments regularly received and processed by the FAO Legal Office: arranged in alphabetical order of countries, preceded by their IRS geographical code. In order to facilitate textual reference, official sources available in the United Nations Library at the Palais des Nations, Geneva, are also identified by their library call-number (UNGL). IRS language codes identify the languages of the texts on file:

SUBJECT INDEX

ANNEX II

The subject categories listed below in numerical and alphabetical order identify the main contents of legislative texts recorded in the existing FAO Food and Agricultural Legislation catalogue. Out of the 130 categories of the catalogue, only the environmentally relevant ones have been selected for the present index and converted into 6-digit descriptors. For example, "L05042" corresponds to Part V, Chapter 4/b of the FAO catalogue.

DATA PRINT-OUT (SAMPLE)

In order to give an indication of the data recorded under the present project, approximately 600 items (representing a 4% fraction of the total) are reproduced here as a sample. This random selection is intended to illustrate the various types of legislative information included, as well as the format in which this information may eventually be reproduced by computer print-out. It does not show the entire volume of the legislation indexed from any one country, nor the range or proportion of all subjects or countries covered (for complete lists see Annex I and II). Transcription of this sample was carried out on a trial basis, to be improved and corrected as the project proceeds.

Each item is indexed according to the following descriptors :

1. Number identifying data obtained from the FAO legislative collection (AFL) as processed for this project (e.g., AFL000534)
2. Date of legislative enactment, by year/month/day (e.g., 760716 = 16 July 1976)
3. Country, and political sub-division where applicable, based on the IRS/UNISIST country code as listed in Annex 1 (e.g., D01200 = Algeria)
4. Language (s) of full text on file, based on the IRS/UNISIST language code as listed in Annex 1 (e.g., EAN;EFR = Arabic and French)
5. Subject (s) identified according to selected classification categories of the FAO collection, as listed in Annex II (e.g., L19040 = national parks and nature reserves legislation)
6. Title of legislative text, as recorded in the FAO collection, in the original language or in English/French translation
7. Source abbreviation of official gazette as listed in Annex I (e.g., J.O.R.A. = Journal officiel de la République algérienne démocratique et populaire), followed by promulgation date/number/page
8. Note of explanation if any, as recorded in the FAO collection (e.g., translation of headings, summary of contents, correction remarks)
9. Cross-reference (s) if any, to or from amending or implementing legislation identified by a different ("see") AFL number under the present project.

Within each geographical category (following the alphabetical order of countries), index data are reproduced in reverse chronological order, i.e. beginning with the most recent legislation recorded. In normal operational use of the catalogue, data would automatically be grouped first by subject category (in response to user requests ; e.g., soil conservation legislation = all laws marked L05033), then by country and date of enactment.

Whenever a previously indexed law is repealed, amended or implemented by subsequent legislation, cross-references are added both to the new item and to the original entry, in order to ensure automatic updating of the computer tape. In view of the comparatively high "turn-over rate" of modern environmental legislation (amendments being issued, on the average, every two years), continuous data maintenance is essential.
